wonderful mind which as far as human speech is concerned, has annihilated distance and has brought the hundreds of millions of the human race mouth to ear. I refer to Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, whose invention of the telephone has wrapped a network of quivering fron nerves about the globe and brought men's souls together.

The actions of Dr. Bell's mind that culminated in the telephone were completed more than a generation ago. That invention was patented in 1876. In 1883 Dr. Bell was one of the prime factors in the creation of the graphophone. A little later on he organized the movement for the teaching of speech to the deaf along the lines of visible speech, invented by his father, Dr. Alexander Meiville Bell, and to a certain extent those of his eminent grandfather, Alexander Bell, who was certain extent those of his eminent grandfather, Alexander Bell, who was

The records of a mind like this are of inestimable value. Dr. Bell began to make them when he was inventing the telephone, and it was the dated records he had kept which enabled him to establish beyond doubt his priority of invention. This showed him the value of such records, and from then until now his mind has, as it were, been before the moving nicture comera of his note

As I looked over this book, I asked Dr. Bell as to whether his mind worked as well now as in the past. He replied: "I have never felt stronger intellectually. My mind has a greater power of concentration than it ever had. It seems to be quicker, and it does not tire along the lines in which I am interested. I sometimes work for 18 hours at a stretch."

his mind has as it were, been before the moving picture camera of his note books, and its actions are filed away for the future. He has kept records and notes of everything that he has thought or experimented upon since that time, and these notes now fill several hundred volumes, giving the complete story, as it were, of his intellectual life.

Within the past five years the manuscript volumes have been condensed into a series of digests, which have been issued from time to time in a typewritten journal, which Dr. Bell calls "The Beinn Bhreagh Recorder."

Beinn Bhreagh is the name of Dr. Bell's summer home at Baddeck, Nova Scotla, and hence the name of the jour-

TRIAL IN BOWIE RESULTS
IN ACQUITTAL OF THREE.

Bowie, Arlz, Aug. 2.—Before United States commissioner Henrich was held the trial of John A. Jenkins, Rodney and David A. Jamison, in connection with a land case at Cochise. The prosecution was represented by United States attorney Morrison, and the defence by judge Doane, of Doughas, and J. C. Gunge, of Willcox. After listening to a large number of witnesses for the government and the defence, commissioner Henrich decided that the land in question was open for contest, thus clearing the defendants of the charge against thom. A similar case in which Percy B. Fulton, Howard K. Fulton and John A. Jenkins were the defendants, was, upon the motion of United States attorney Morrison, dismissed.
